(United Press Staff Correspondent)

Paris, May 10—Berlin dispatches to the French foreign office today indicated Germany will accept the allied ultimatum.

The messages were not made public but at the Quai D'Orsay it appeared to be accepted that the Germans will sign.

French troops were eagerly waiting to advance. They are held at the border of the Ruhr valley prepared to march forward if Germany shows signs of evading any of the terms.

Vols Party Votes Against Acceptance

Berlin, May 10—Unexpected opposition to acceptance of the allied ultimatum developed among Reichstag leaders today.

All night sessions of party leaders failed to bring the democrats and Volks party leaders into agreement with the majority socialists to favor acceptance of the demand.

At 1 A. M. the Volks party caucus voted against acceptance. The democrats continued in session. If the democrats finally oppose acceptance the government will stand a chance of defeat and the allied invasion would start as planned.

The Reichstag was to meet at 4 P. M. for action on the allied demand. At that time it was believed the various parties would have determined their course and a new cabinet would be in process of formation.

Paul Loebe, majority socialist, was the leading candidate for chancellor.

ANNUAL I. W. W. CONVENTION MET TODAY IN CHICAGO

IS TAME AFFAIR COMPARED WITH FORMER MEETINGS—DE-
GATES TALK ENGLISH

(By United Press)

Chicago, May 10—Wild-eyed reds of the country have gone through the laundry of conversation and have come out a faded pink.

In other words, a radical isn't what he used to be.

A visit to the annual convention of the Industrial Workers of the World today demonstrated that conclusively.

For instance, none of the forty-five delegates carried TNT bombs on their hips. Also there were no printing presses turning out seditious literature by the ton. There were no long whiskered gentlemen speaking in broken English among the delegates. All the representatives talked English but talked it mildly.

Advocates of overthrow of the government were not present. The delegates advocated the acquisition of additional members and little else. The chief problem of the radicals was this:

"How in the world are we going to scrape up the $75,000 to reimburse bondsmen of our nine convicted brethren who failed to answer the roll call at Fort Leavenworth penitentiary."

Up to the time of going to press no answer was found to this question that is causing grave concern from Ray Brown, secretary-treasurer of the party.

Tax Exempted Bonds Add to Public Utility Rates

(United Press)

Washington, May 10—The wholesale issuance of tax exempt securities is one of the causes of high car fares, electric lights and gas rates. Philip H. Gadsen, of Philadelphia, told the senate finance committee today.

Gadsen, representing the American Electrical Railroad association, told the committee that public utility bonds had to carry high interest rates to compete with tax exempted bonds of federal, state and city governments. This adds to the cost of utility operations, he said.

(By United Press)

Minot, N. D., May 10—The North Dakota depositors guarantee fund law was attacked and the federal reserve system praised as "the one great salvation" before a meeting of the North Dakota bankers here today.

A. F. Seavard, of Velsa, president of the Northwestern District Bankers' association, made the declaration. He urged "elevating" the state bank of North Dakota to a rural credit bank and condemned officials for accusing the state bank of "being the tool of Wall Street."

He charged political agitation has destroyed public faith and trying to commit sabotage in the state.

Seavard deplored criticism of the federal reserve system by "certain citizens of the state and high officials."

"The large city bank is the strong arm on which we have leaned," he said.

BUSINESS STAGNA- TION NOT DUE TO HIGH FREIGHT RATE

SOUTHERN PACIFIC PRESIDENT
SAYS IT IS DUE RATHER TO PROFITING MIDDLE-
MEN

(By United Press)

Washington, May 10—An attack on the "widespread propaganda" for lower freight rates opened the senate interstate commerce committee investigation of the railroads today.

Julius Kruttschitt, chairman of the board of the Southern Pacific, told the committee that general deflation and not high freight rates was responsible for public stagnation.

He blamed this stagnation to the inability of producers to dispose of their products and charged that in many cases the middleman was responsible for lower rate agitation.

The witness proposed a series of reforms involving regulation of the transportation systems competing with the railroads.

"The fact is," he said, "that ever since the rates have been advanced the cost of transporting commodities is far less than the toll taken by the commission merchant and retailer. Consequently people are misled and have concluded the high freight rates have stopped shipment of large amounts of freight and that the railroads would make more money if they would reduce their rates and thereby revive transportation."

"Many commodities would not be moved even if freight charges would be abolished altogether because producers can find no market," he continued, and in support of this point showed that while ocean rates have been the lowest in history, ships are idle in many ports. He pointed to the case of cotton on which he said inland freight rates were 24 1/2 cents per one hundred pounds while ocean freight rates had declined to 45 cents per one hundred pounds in March of this year since August of last year, when the rate was $1.98, nevertheless 40 per cent of the Texas crop remained unmoved, he said.

MISS GLADYS NITTERAUER

Her Organ Recital Gains Favorable Mention from Louisville, Ky., Critics

It is always a pleasure to those in the home town when those who have gone out to distant places make for themselves a reputation and take an important place as leaders in any worthy sphere. And the citizens of Brainerd will appreciate the triumph of Miss Gladys Nitterauer whose appearance in an organ recital is heralded by the Louisville Herald as a "Triumph for Miss Nitterauer."

Of the recital the Herald has this to say:

"The organ is a choir as well as an orchestra and its command calls for the qualities that go into the making of both director and conductor. There must be no confusion between the several parts. There must be a perfect and harmonious accord. There must be submission at times to the requirements of that particular voice of the noble instrument which is to pierce."

Now, as it seems to me, it was the intelligent grasp of these truths, obvious, perhaps, but too often overlooked in an effort after theatrical virtuosity, which distinguished the playing of Miss Gladys Nitterauer, whose recital at Christ Church Cathedral Tuesday attracted a notable audience. Presented by Ernest Arthur Simon, organist and choirmaster, there was evidence at once of his scholarly instruction, his careful direction in the sense she evinced for the dignity of the instrument and its surroundings. Her style is churchly, which is the very antithesis of cheap; her registration displays a smoothness and absence of noise, her pedaling an ease and all her technique a restraint and modesty most highly to be commended and all too rarely encountered in the younger generation. To say that, in manner and method, Miss Nitterauer's playing is reverent and distinguished, perhaps best conveys the impression we received.

It was a program well balanced but exacting, including such big tasks as the Gullmunt first sonata, the contrapuntal difficulties of Bach's better known Prelude and Fugue in E minor, that most effective and haunting Largo from Dvorak's New World symphony, for lighter moments a delicious pastiche of Lemare's and, at climax, the thrilling, pulsating Allegro Pomposo of West. In all the level of performance was very high. In all the same broad conception was manifested, the same quality of restraint that could not disguise a really remarkable power. Especially to be noted was the equable legato and the refusal to let the magnificence of the instrument overshadow the scholarship of the composers.

Miss Nitterauer was admirably assisted by Miss Ester Metz, an artist especially at home in such appealing numbers, part declamatory, part lyric, as the "Hear Ye, Israel" from Elijah and the ineffable "These Are They," from Gaul's Holy City.

E. A. J.

And the critic in the Louisville Courier Journal writes as follows:

Gladys Nitterauer, who was presented by Ernest A. Simon in an organ recital last night at Christ Church Cathedral, played an ambitious programme in a creditable manner. Her selections included Gullmunt's First Sonata, Bach's Prelude and Fugue in E minor, the Dvorak Largo, Lemare's Pastoral in E, and an effective "Allegro Pomposo" by J. E. West. Miss Nitterauer played smoothly, her pedaling was skillful and her registrations well chosen. Lack of poise was betrayed by a tendency to hurry up and by indefiniteness in some passages of the Sonata. She showed, however, good control in the Bach and in the "Pastoral" and West "Allegro" showed that, at her best, she can attain spontaneity and brilliance.

Ester Metz contributed two solos Mendelssohn's "Hear Ye, Israel," and "These Are They" from Gaul's "The Holy City." Both were sung with the intelligence and tonal beauty characteristic of this gifted young soprano.

Unscrupulous Farmers Bootlegging

Minot, May 10—Unscrupulous farmers near the Canadian border have been earning a triple commission in offering themselves as pilots across the guarded line, according to F. L. Watkins, state prohibition officer. They charge wholesalers and runners so much per case for guiding the latter across the guarded line and then lead them into an ambush of "hi-jackers" collecting from the bandits later.

Watkins' forces have turned their attention to this brand of law breakers since the lull commenced in the running business. Convicted farmers will find their land tied up with an injunction which will practically compel them to sell or lose their crops, Mr. Watkins said.

FOOLISH PRO-GERMANISM

Pro-Germanism is not dead in this country. A writer whose stuff is widely syndicated remarks that the allies are shocked at Germany's refusal to pay the war debt swiftly, yet remain entirely oblivious to the fact that they, in their turn, are showing little haste to pay off their indebtedness to the United States. Such a remark is an insult to allied integrity and American loyalty. Fortunately the majority of Americans will reject it with the scorn it deserves.

There can be no comparison in the two cases. Germany's plight is her fault, that of the allies their misfortune. Germany can pay, in some way or other, and will not. The allies would, and cannot. They cannot for just one reason—Germany will not. Let Germany once set about payment of the debt she owes and the allies will set about paying America.

Every word which upholds Germany in ignoring the crime she committed and her obligation to pay off the day of payment, and that, in turn delays payment to us of the allied debt.

It is neither good Americanism, good faith nor good business to make parallel cases out of the two situations.

ATTACK INFANCY AID BILL

The Sheppard-Towner maternity bill came under the fire of physicians recently before a senate committee. The opposition declared the federal maternity and infancy aid bill proposed was superfluous and demanded by no one "except a few women who have money to burn and time to waste." The bill was described as "a huge fabrication of inflated socialist ideals" and as "the entering wedge to state or federal control of the practice of medicine." The opposition also contended that the bill is a contravention of the general welfare clause of the constitution and an additional burden to taxpayers.

SAVINGS DEPOSITS

America's national savings bank deposits now stand at approximately $6,500,000,000, according to an estimate of the controller of the currency. Exact reports on the entry will be collected by the controller next month. Before the war, savings accounts in the nation's 30,000 banks totaled only $3,000,000,000 or less than one-half that at present.

UPRISING SHOWS
BOLSHEVISM IS NO
MENACE TO GERMANY

By CARL D. GROAT
(United Press Staff Correspondent)
Berlin—(By Mail)—That bolshevism has no chance to strangle Germany is the conclusion of neutral observers from the results of the latest red outburst in mid-Germany and elsewhere.

Despite the time-worn cry of various official sources that Germany runs the danger of going red—an obvious attempt to influence the outside world—the course of the latest "revolution" shows that bolshevism or communism is a weak thing in Germany.

The mid-German uprising was the first big attempt of the reds to enforce their regime in Germany since the split of the independent socialist party at Kalls last fall. At that time, the ultra-radicals went into the communist camp, with a frank declaration of adherence to Moscow's principles of terrorism and "action."

These principles were given a good tryout here in March and the result is—taken from a world standpoint—negligible as far as showing any tendency toward actual red control in Germany is concerned.

The action was ill-conceived and badly executed. The government easily controlled the situation, mainly with police troops although, it did use some regulars toward the last. The suspicion exists—and this is strengthened by my personal observations in mid-Germany—that the government proceeded slowly, so as not to let the outside world picture its task as too simple. And, the police officers everywhere made propaganda for more arms. They constantly referred to the entente as "awful" for leaving them so disarmed. But it was notable that everywhere they made a quick cleanup with small casualties, except at Eisleben, where resistance lasted rather longer and involved some sharp fighting.

The red movement was a complete failure, and Moscow has been heaping abuse upon the heads of the red leaders and their followers in Germany ever since the fiasco.

The real truth of the situation—confirming previous statements of this correspondent—is that communism in Germany, while having many followers, is really a weak, unorganized thing, to which the bulk of the German workers are opposed.

The workers have a considerable amount of concealed weapons, but this number is probably exaggerated for propaganda purposes. I saw a house searching in a town outside Mansfield. This developed only about a dozen rifles, some of them of doubtful age and value.

And, the "siege" of Mansfield was about as tame an affair as one could imagine. A party of American correspondents trailed the victorious army into Mansfield. Several companies of police, all armed with rifles and grenades, with trucks armed with machine guns, were in the procession. The police are mostly non-coms. They know war, and like it. They outmatch the regulars. Their treatment of prisoners is far from gentle. The press has been raising a howl that they have shot down men virtually in cold blood when there was no occasion for it. My personal experience with them is that they are imbued with the old Prussian military spirit, full of bluster, mean to the point of insult, but cringing when faced by courageous opposition. This proved to be the case when they took into custody besides myself Correspondent Nicholson of the Philadelphia Public Ledger and Correspondent MacCartney of the London Times.

AMUSEMENTS

At the Lyceum
"The Garter Girl," which will be seen at the Lyceum theatre Wednesday and Thursday is one of Corinne Griffith's best efforts. It is a story that will appeal to thousands of picture fans throughout the country because of its theatrical and rural atmosphere. Miss Griffith has a role that calls for great diversity of action and characterization. From the care free headliner on a vaudeville bill to the prim little soloist in the village church is quite a jump and calls for versatility. Miss Griffith rises to great heights in her interpretation of the role. Her personality, her mannerisms and attractive gowns lend themselves well to the portrayal of Rosalie Ray, the girl who left the stage to go to the country in search of a real man, a man unlike those who hang around the stage door. She found that all men were alike.

At the New Park
Georges Carpentier, idol of France, whose notable record in the boxing ring has won him fame and fortune and whose fascinating personality has made him the idol of two continents, will be the chief attraction at the New Park theatre in "The Wonder Man," for a two days' showing, beginning Friday.

The picture promises an entertainment unique in the realm of the cinema art. Unlike the previous efforts of producers to bring champions of the prize ring before the public on the silver screen in the roles of daredevil heroes or in hair-raising serials Georges Carpentier is given as a vehicle an intriguing romance of American society, with himself in the role of a smart, well-dressed man about town.

"The Wonder Man" gives the public its first opportunity to really know this favorite son of France—in fact it gives the first opportunity for his many admirers to see him. More than 2,000 persons braved the muddy roads of New Jersey to see him in his fighting togs for the first time in America.

NATURE FOND OF FREAKS

Good Old Dame Seems to Take Pride in Perpetuating Physical Oddities in Mankind.

Occasionally it happens that a boy or girl is born with webbed feet—that is to say, with toes united by fleshy tissues. It is a phenomenon called "syndactyly."

This eccentricity is apt to be handed down from generation to generation in a family, appearing in some of its members, but not in others.

The Magazine of Heredity describes one such case, in a branch of an old New England family. The paternal grandfather was web-footed and bequeathed his peculiar toes to a son, who passed them along to three of his six children.

If these people were to intermarry for three or four generations with another web-footed family, all the children born would exhibit the peculiarity. For nature, curiously enough, seems always willing to perpetuate freaks of any kind.

What we call freaks, or "sports," in the animal or the vegetable world are nature's little experiments. It is by this means that she creates new species and varieties. Some anthropologists are of opinion that all human beings were originally black and that the first white man was a sport.

It might be said that many white people today respond to that description, though not in the same sense.—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Significance of Maintained Quality

OF highest significance to the motorist is the fact that during those times when the demands for gasoline have been so great as to threaten positive famines, Red Crown, the high grade motor gasoline manufactured by the Standard Oil Company (Indiana), maintained its standard of quality in the face of every difficulty.

Impartial tests made on authority of the Government proved Red Crown surpassed the specifications set by the Government for its requirements of motor gasoline. These facts indicate the ideals of service which animate the activities of the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) in every department of its business.

To maintain the quality of a product when the demand is normal is a general practice. It is when demand is pressing and the supply is low that insistence upon maintained quality is a true measure of a manufacturer's integrity.

To maintain the quality of each product at the point set by the technical staff is an outstanding characteristic of the Standard Oil Company (Indiana). Red Crown is a good example.

Another is Fortnite long-time burner oil. This product is used in railway signal lamps. These signals are often located at points remote from human habitation. For public safety their uninterrupted service is of the utmost importance. It is essential that the oil shall burn with a clear, bright flame for days at a time without attention.

During the blizzard of January, 1918, lamps filled with Fortnite, located high up in the Rocky Mountains, burned night and day during the ten days that traffic was tied up, and at the end of that period they were giving perfect service.

It is only by multiplying such records of quality and integrity of manufacture over a long period of years that the reader can grasp the degree of public confidence enjoyed by Standard Oil Company (Indiana).

HELD HABITUAL CRIMINAL

Police of St. Paul Ask Prosecution of Woman Under New State Law, Arguments Advanced

Miss Rose Callahan of St. Paul, who has been in police court numerous times on charges of vagrancy and other offenses, is the first person to be accused under the new law enacted by the last legislature providing that any person convicted three times of a misdemeanor may be charged as a habitual criminal and be made liable to a penalty of three years imprisonment.

Thomas W. McMeekin, formerly of Brainerd, her attorney, urged that the charge would not hold, as it would make the law retroactive, as she had committed only one offense since the law was passed, and she could not be held on offenses committed before the law was passed.

INDIAN SENTRIES NOW ASK PENSION

Caught Cold 59 Years Ago as They Were Doing Guard Duty at Fort Ripley Stockade

NO PRESCRIPTIONS WERE THERE

Attorney General's Office is Considering the Claims Filed by the Two Redskins

It was a cold, dark night in 1862. Maybe it wasn't so cold, but it was mighty dark and the two human forms that walked patiently back and forth in front of the stockade at Fort Ripley, Minn., thought that morning would never come. As they stopped to talk to each other their teeth chattered, and they thought of their warm beds at home.

"This is all right for some people," grumbled one sentry to the other, "but when a fellow isn't used to it, it's hell. I can feel a cold draft on the back of my neck."

"You win, buddy," replied the other sentry, shifting his sheath of arrows to the other shoulder. "This is the first time I've ever let stay me out all night. And after this war's over, I suppose nobody'll ever give us credit for it. They'll say the M. P.'s won it."

"Yeah," said the first sentry, "that's what we get for hooking up with the pale faces. They take us from our warm tepees and make us stay up all night right out in the open air. Hope the squaw has some aspirin ready when I get home."

The above conversation is invented out of the thin air, but here's something that isn't:

Two Indians, now living at the White Earth Indian reservation near Detroit, Minn., have applied for pensions to which persons who were disabled as a result of serving and suffering during the Indian massacres near New Ulm and Fort Ripley in 1862, are entitled.

They say they were disabled as a result of "being conscripted and put on guard duty and subjected to exposure by being out all night." From which exposure, they claim, they never have recovered, and as a result still are disabled. Their claims were referred to Colonel A. F. Pratt, assistant attorney general.

Allowance of the claims filed by the Indians depends on two things, according to the attorney general's office. First, whether or not they served between August and September 15, 1862, and second, whether it will be considered that the exposure suffered fifty-nine years ago could be responsible for their present disability.

Now that the facts are out, here's some more conversation:

The streaks of light between the clouds heralded the coming of dawn. How About a Prescription?

"Well, day's almost here," observed the first sentry, speaking in Sioux and sniffing ominously as he reached for his handkerchief.

"Yep," croaked the other, his voice hoarse. "The ordeal's almost over. This is the best example I know of where the white men have forced us Indians to adopt their ways and customs, to our grief. Making us stay out in the open air all night! Well, it's been a great experience! Do you know where we can get a prescription?"

DISTRICT COURT PROCEEDINGS

Case of the State vs W. T. Dalton, an Appeal Case, is Now on Trial in District Court

WILLIAM ZERBY IS NOT GUILTY

Man Defended by L. B. Kinder Proves an Alibi in the Deerwood Depot Robbery Case

"Not guilty", said the jury in "the case wherein William Zerby was charged with the robbery of the Deerwood depot, the complaint specifying that two parties unknown were associated in the crime.

Zerby's defense was an alibi; that he was at the home of his father-in-law Clark W. Bassett on Mille Lacs lake at the hour of the robbery was committed and that he had absolutely nothing to do with it. The evidence introduced by the defense showed he was at Bassett's house all night.

William Zerby, the night operator at the Deerwood railway depot, told his story of the robbery. He claimed the leader of the trio wore a long black coat, khaki pants and brown shoes, and all were masked. He claimed the man had a scar on the back of his hand near the base of his thumb.

It was shown Zerby had no scar on his hand in such a place. When Zerby was arrested three days after the robbery at Deerwood, he was walking on the road into Deerwood. When hailed by a car carrying deputy sheriff and railway detectives and asked if he wanted a ride, he ran up to the car and rode with the party and was arrested when the car neared Shannon Inn.

Ash told his story of the robbery and positively identified Zerby as one of the three men. He said the depot was robbed of $85.87 on Tuesday morning, April 19, at 3:45 o'clock. Shots were fired through the window of the depot.

Zerby was defended by Attorney L. B. Kinder, who was appointed by the court when Zerby appealed for legal aid. The jury was out 20 minutes.

The case on in district court this afternoon is that of the State vs W. T. Dalton, an appeal case.

ONLY UNITED STATES HAS AL FRESCO INAUGURATION

If President Harding had been inducted into the chief office in some other republics on March 4, the ceremonies would have varied from a simplicity even greater than that he insisted upon, to an investiture of almost regal splendor.

If he had followed the customs long observed in France, the ceremony would have taken place in the White House. Instead of taking a formal oath he would have uttered a pledge to consecrate himself to the service of the republic—and he would have ended by kissing the retiring President on both cheeks.

If he had been made President according to the practice of the Mexicans, he would have taken the oath in the hall of the house of representatives at midnight. After the administration of the oath he would have received the embrace of his predecessor.

In Brazil after being sworn in, he would have hung across his chest a broad band of the colors of the country, supporting a medal—the insignia of the presidency.

In Chile, following the taking of the oath before a joint session of congress, he would have gone through streets lined with soldiers at "present arms," to a special Te Deum service in the principal church of the city. Immediately afterward he would have held a reception, and would then have paid a visit to the ex-president.

If he had been inducted into the presidency of the war-torn and war-threatened republic of Poland, he would have gone to a "White House" at whose doors were stationed cavalrymen with drawn sabers. When he went abroad he would be preceded, not by a trim policeman or an Argus-eyed secret service man, but by a herald who would demand that the populace "uncover before the most noble President."

And if Mr. Harding, instead of being installed as chief executive of the world's biggest republic, had been seated as one of the heads of the smallest republic, San Marino, he would have experienced the most elaborate procedure of all. He would have donned quaint medieval state garments; would have marched through the streets of the capital preceded by heralds and escorted by gorgeously-uniformed soldiers; would have attended a preliminary church service during which his predecessor would sit on a canopied throne soon to be occupied by him; and finally, would have had placed on his head a headress indicative of his office.

In addition to differences in the official ceremonies by which the presidents of the world are inducted into office, there are many variations in the festivities and celebrations that accompany these events. In some cases the accompanying observances have become practically a part of the official procedure. The newly installed French president almost invariably drives to the Hotel de Ville, the Paris city hall, after taking office, to attend a luncheon and reception as the guest of the president and members of the municipal council. In Mexico, during the evening preceding the midnight induction into office, the president-elect usually attends a banquet given in his honor by the mayor of the City of Mexico. There is a public reception at the presidential palace the morning after the inauguration.

In Chile the inauguration day is often closed by a special concert at the municipal theater, and on the following evening the new president gives a state banquet for diplomatic representatives, special envoys and high officials of the republic and the provinces.

The United States, although its capital is in a more rigorous climate than those of many republics, is alone in having an "al fresco" inauguration.

THE WINNING OF THE CANADIAN WEST

Discovery of oil in northwest Canada toward the Arctic circle has increased the importance of the western Canadian provinces near the United States border, which will be the doorway for the new oil treasury.

The prairie provinces of Canada—Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta—were not for their bids to fame before this discovery. For example:

The last of the wild buffalo herds of America, survivors of the millions of animals which roamed the plains and woodlands of the continent, now ranges through northwestern Alberta. This province alone is estimated to contain 15 per cent of the world's known coal supply.

The myriad of wild ducks, geese, and other migratory fowl that fly northward each spring are for the most part bound for the northern parts of the three prairie provinces, where they build their nests and rear their young.

considered at once, for among them they cover all of Canada which is in process of being settled, west of the older Great Lakes province of Ontario and east of the Rocky mountains. This is Canada's "West," where restless pioneer spirits from all lands are carving out an empire as kindred spirits a generation or so ago wrought the wilderness of the Missouri valley and the "great American desert" into the rich states of today.

The Canadian pioneers have advantages over those who won the American West, in that they have better railroad methods and equipment, telephones and wireless. But they have a relentless new enemy in the bitter cold of the northern regions of the provinces. For though the southern portions are separated from the United States by only an imaginary line, and are similar to the northern reaches of Minnesota, North Dakota and Montana, of which they are geographically a part, to the north the three provinces sweep to within 500 miles of the Arctic circle.

The predominant part of the population and development of the three provinces is in their southern halves. In this region Winnipeg, capital of Manitoba, with its population close to 200,000, is Canada's Chicago of a generation or so ago; while Edmonton, capital of Alberta, is the St. Paul of a similar period. The northern portion of the provinces is a region crossed by many rivers and dotted with numberless lakes, a region divided between woodlands and "muskegs," or swampy flats. There the trapper still reigns supreme and life is primitive.

WHEN DINOSAURS GAMBOLED IN AMERICA

Spring in America, which is heralded in this age by the coming of the birds, the stirring of small animals and the emergence from hibernation and water lethargy of the few large animals that civilization has left us, was a vastly different matter a few eons ago when America produced animals larger than any now living here. An idea of what these creatures were like is given in the following communication to the National Geographic society from Barnum Brown:

"That was so long ago that nothing remains of these creatures except their bones, and they are turned to stone. Hidden away under strata of earth, their spoor has long since grown cold.

"The animals are dinosaurs; for the moment we will call them lizards—not the creeping, crawling kind, but huge reptiles that stalked upright through the jungles, rivaling in size the elephant, the hippopotamus and the rhinoceros.

"In the marshes of prehistoric times dwell a host of reptiles, some large, some small, and of various forms, flesh eaters and herb eaters, but all sharing certain characters in common and known as dinosaurs. Not any were closely related to any living reptile, yet they had some characters common to the lizards, crocodiles and birds.

"Of the kinds characteristic of the period one species, an herb eater named Trachodon, was more than 30 feet long and about 15 feet high when standing erect. Its head, with broadly-expanded mouth, resembles that of a duck, but back of the back there are more than two thousand small teeth, disposed in many vertical rows, each containing several individual teeth, the new ones coming up from below as the old ones wore out.

"The long hind feet terminated in three large-toed toes, and the shorter, slender front feet were partly webbed. A long, thin, slender tail acted as a powerful swimming organ, and the body was covered with rough tuberculate skin. Having no means of defense, it lived chiefly in the water, where it was free from attacks of the flesh eaters.

"Strange as all was the herbivorous Ankylosaurus, a stocky, short-legged, big-bodied creature, completely encased in armor. Dermal plates covered the skull, followed by rings of plates over the neck and rows of flat plates over the back and hips. Its tail terminated in a huge club, and the belly was covered by a pliable mosaic of small, close-set plates. It was further protected by a movable plate that could be dropped down like a shutter over each eye, thus completing its protection from insects and formidable foes."

WHERE SOME OF OUR IMPORTS COME FROM—PERFUMES

Milady America paid $4,972,541, during the last year for perfumes, cosmetics and toilet preparations, a fact which has led to confused speculation by mere men as to what she did with them.

The real romance and adventure in the statement lies not so much in the uses to which these imports were put as where they came from. The sunny Isles and lands along the Mediterranean probably grew some of the flowers, others perhaps were plucked by dark Moorish hands in Algeria, and maybe an animal in the brooding hills of western China gave its life to furnish one constituent of the perfume.

The vegetable kingdom is necessarily the most fertile source of perfumes. From its flowers such as the rose and jessamine, and from its seeds, woods and berries, such as the spices and sandalwood, even the most fastidious connoisseur would be able to select either some simple odor or a complex bouquet.

alone, but for scenting soaps, creams, pomades, and in making flavorings and extracts.

Rosemary, thyme, sweet basil, and marjoram are found in great profusion in Mediterranean countries, and here the chemist can distill the whole plant and not bother about picking the flowers. Shakespeare, the unfailing naturalist that he was, made no error when he chose for Ophelia the flowers she scattered.

The old-fashioned lavender flowers in which our grandmothers used to pack the household linen, and their rich old lace grew best in France and England.

The rose geranium, which has such an exquisite odor is also grown and distilled in France, but Spain, Algiers, and the Island of Reunion engage in the industry. Unlike the lavender, however, the perfume of the rose geranium comes from its leaves and not from the flowers.

But the country that might well be known by its scent is Bulgaria, for its rose crop is second only to its tobacco. Over 12,500 acres of land in the provinces of Philippopolis and Stara Zagora are given to the growth of roses from the petals of which attar of roses is distilled. In the wonderful gardens at Kazanlik, Kariovo, Kilsoura and Stara Zagora, the best of the flowers are grown.

About four thousand pounds of roses are produced on an acre of land, but it takes about two hundred pounds of petals to produce an ounce of oil, for an attar which before the war cost about $200 a pound.

Roses are grown in other parts of the Balkans, as well as in Asiatic Turkey, and in India, Persia, the Fayum province in Egypt, and in France. The industry lately has been introduced into Germany.

The animal perfumes are extremely limited in number. Ambergris is secreted by the sperm whale, civit by the animal of the same name, and musk by the musk ox, the musk rat, and the musk deer, which is found in the high Himalayas, Tibet, and eastern Siberia. About 15,000 ounces of musk, usually in the grain form, are annually imported to the United States from China and India. Musk has one peculiar and almost inexplicable characteristic. One grain of it kept freely exposed to the air of a well-ventilated room, will impregnate the atmosphere for ten years without sensibly diminishing in weight.

WRITER MUST HAVE STYLE

Without It, Declares Arnold Bennett, He Will Be Unable to Get His Message Understood.

You cannot have good matter with bad style. Examine the point more closely. A man wishes to convey a fine idea to you. He employs a form of words. That form of words is his style. Having read, you say: "Yes, this idea is fine." The writer has therefore achieved his end. But in what imaginable circumstances can you say: "Yes, this idea is fine, but the style is not fine?" The sole medium of communication between you and the author has been the form of words. The fine idea has reached you. How? In the words, by the words. Hence the fineness must be in the words. You may say, superiorly: "He has expressed himself clumsily, but I can see what he means." By what light? By something in the words. In the style. That something is fine. Moreover, if the style is clumsy, are you sure that you can see what he means? You cannot be quite sure. And at any rate, you cannot see distinctly. The "matter" is what actually reaches you, and it must necessarily be affected by the style.—Arnold Bennett.

Rents High in Stone Age.

Southern California had apartment profiteers back in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, according to a scientific correspondent whose investigation of the stone age dwellings, hewn out of solid rock, has convinced him that keeping up an apartment never was a snap. At the entrance to one six-apartment cavern he found hieroglyphics, which he has deciphered to mean the rates for apartments as follows:

One abalone, one sun.
Two abalones, two suns.
Three abalones, three suns.
Twelve abalones, one moon.

Our correspondent figures that the home hunters among the Pimungna Indians had to pay at the rate of one abalone a sleep, or day, or 12 abalones per lunar month. The cave was the largest on the island and comprised the apartment house de luxe of that period. A short distance below the entrance to the stone apartment house the professor found a huge pile of empty abalone shells, proving that the landlord did a more or less rushing business.

"Fossil Raindrops."

In slabs of Triassic rock little depressions are often seen that have been called "fossil raindrops," the idea being that they were formed by showers on muddy sea beaches, and preserved by being covered with a layer of mud at the next high tide.

But lately it has been suggested, in view of observations on a flood plain in the Dorn valley, that the supposed impressions of rain drops may really be due to pittings formed by bubbles in a film of mud at the bottom of shallow water. There have been watched the formation of many pittings, and it has been found that after the mud has dried they exactly resemble "fossil raindrops."

PREDICTS DEFEAT OF RADICALS IN COMING ITALIAN ELECTION

BY HENRY WOOD
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

Rome—(By Mail)—With the new parliamentary elections on May 15 there is every indication that Italy will enter on a new era, where freed from the menace of radicalism and voluntarily giving up her past policy of territorial expansion, she will devote her best energies to internal reconstruction, both materially and socially.

This is the electoral program outlined by Premier Giolitti at the moment he dissolved the last chamber, and there is every indication that the country responding again to his statesmanship will return a chamber where in there will be a big workable majority for carrying out the internal reforms which now constitute Italy's crying need.

The convening of this new chamber on June 11 will mark an epoch in Italy's history from several points of view. First of all, the number of deputies increased to 535 by reason of the newly acquired provinces, will give Italy its first chamber representing Italy as a unified whole. These 535 deputies will come from 40 different electoral districts, whereof half a dozen were created out of newly added provinces including Zara, Parenzo, Gorizia, Trieste, Bolzano and Trent.

In the second place the new chamber will mark that definite epoch which has already been passed by all of the other allied countries, wherein Italy can be said to take up at last the new life created for her by the war.

By the treaty of Rapallo, Giolitti established not only the last disputed boundaries of the new territory acquired by Italy through the war, but established likewise final friendly relations with the Yugoslavs. Italy therefore has acquired the natural strategic frontiers which she has always insisted were indispensable to her national safety and she has established friendly relations with all of the states outgrowing from the breakup of the Austro-Hungarian empire, namely, Yugoslavia, Roumania, Czechoslovakia and Poland. Giolitti also imposed on Italy the giving up of all plans of territorial expansion in Albania and along the eastern Adriatic coast generally.

Radicalism is no longer a danger in Italy and this problem has been settled precisely as it was settled, only, more quickly, in France and the northern war countries.

In the new elections, it is expected that both the socialist and popular parties will lose heavily. From the 154 deputies which the socialists elected in the 1919 elections the number is expected from anywhere from 50 to 100.

The broadlines of Italy's internal reconstruction program are the re-adjustment of the budget so as to wipe out the four billion deficit which still remains; the reformation of Italy's present bureaucratic methods of administration; legal reforms; educational reforms, including not only a greater extension of public education, but the changing of present prescribed courses to meet the needs of modern life; agricultural reforms, including the solving of the problem of the big landed estates, which are not yet under cultivation, and, finally, labor legislation, that will permit of the fullest productivity between labor and capital. This latter includes Giolitti's famous project for the granting to workmen of the right of control or auditing of all the leading industries.

Without question, King Victor Emanuel will confide again to Giolitti the task of forming the new government. At whatever time his government may fall, however, Nitti will without question be the statesman most in view as his successor.

Has Had Ten Capitals.
North Carolina has had at least ten capitals, including Bath, Edenton, Brunswick, Wilmington, Newberry, Hillsboro, Smithfield, Fayette and Raleigh. The reason for so many lay in the custom prior to 1774 of transferring the seat of government to the place of residence of the governor or the temporary meeting place of the assembly.

In 1791 one square mile of land was purchased for the foundation of Raleigh as the permanent seat of government. At present the city covers four square miles.

"COEUR DE LION"

Relic of Great British Monarch Found at Rouen.

Intact, Though Shrunken in Dimensions, When Discovered in Vault of Famous French Cathedral.

The reported discovery of a coffin containing the heart of Robert Bruce at Melrose abbey reminds the Manchester Guardian that the "lion heart" of King Richard I was not discovered in Rouen cathedral until Queen Victoria's reign.

In 1838 some antiquaries obtained permission from the archbishop of Rouen to search for Richard's heart, which tradition stated was near the high altar. Their excavations revealed a recumbent figure of Richard, in good preservation, with the exception of the nose, hands and feet, which apparently had been broken so as to flatten the effigy when the present pavement was laid over it.

Their next find was a leaden case inscribed "Richard Cœur de Lion, Duc de Normandie, Roi d'Angleterre."

A hole had been made in the lid—probably by robbers, for it is said that the leaden case was originally inclosed in a silver casket and that some coins were placed therein.

The heart, which was enveloped in green taffeta, proved to be intact, though shrunken in its dimensions. After sojourning for a time in the archbishop's palace the heart was transferred to the Rouen Museum of Antiquities, where it has been kept ever since.

Richard's other remains are many miles from Rouen—at Fontevault abbey, where they lay, as he directed, at his father's feet. Napoleon III once promised to hand over to British the Plantagenet relics, but they have not reached England.

In 1806, when Lord Derby became premier for the third time, he reminded the emperor of his pledge, but to no effect.

"If you insist on the fulfillment of my promise," said Napoleon, "the relics shall be transferred to England, but I hope you will release me. The people of Fontevault raised such a storm of protest when I announced my intention of removing them that I thought better of it."

Fontevault abbey now serves as a convict prison, but visitors are admitted to the vaults, which contain recumbent effigies—dressed in their royal robes—of Henry II and Queen Eleanor, their son Richard, and Isabel, widow of King John. These were hidden away by some monks during the Reign of Terror, when the Plantagenet tombs were desecrated.

The royal effigies are admirable examples of medieval workmanship.

Placing the Obligation.
"Hopkins is inviting me out to spend the week-end at this place, but I hate to put myself under obligations to such a fellow." "Oh, don't feel that way about it. Hopkins never pays his bills, so it will be to his butcher and grocer that you're under obligations."—New York Sun.
